A Kindling Friendship

It's amazing how little space there is in your brain for thinking about anything other than the next six feet when you are belly down in gravel or mud in a tunnel ten inches tall. You focus on breathing and moving six inches at a time, dragging yourself along with your hands and pushing with your ankles on the floor or ceiling. You wonder why you thought this was fun because it's a strain to move, your breath comes in pants, and every option in your life has been reduced to one. You are there and you must keep moving forward. Then you go again the next weekend.
